The stock market to-day was moderately s tive in all its parts, but, as usual a few stocks monopolized the larger part of the allings, and while considerable narrowness as seen in the forenoon, the market percoptibly broadened later in the day, and the list, as a whole, closed materially higher than last evening. Delawate and Hudsen, with a final loss of 1½ per cent., and Reading, with a decline of 1 per cent., were the only prominent examples of weakness during the day. In the afternoon there was heavy selling of Reading, both stocks and leads, the other Coalers sympathizing on the announcement that the processor State. leads, the other Coalers sympathizing on the announcement that the proposed State hallway Commission was to be given power to name a maximum price. The market opened at higher prices all along the line. Distillers being the only marked exception, and while there was a momentary advance established, the selling pressure of Distil-lers seen again became heavy, and after sell-ling to 37 it retired to 34. Here, however, a good demand was developed, and before the afternoon was over it had risen 6 per cent to 40, which brought out some stock, and it retired in the dealings to 38%, at which point it showed a net gain of 34, and it retired in the dealings to 38%, at which point it showed a net gain of 3½ per cent. Sugar was rather sluggish, and while following the course of Distillers in the main, its range of price was only 1½ per cent., and its final change was a small fractional gain. The railroad list was quiet at the whole, but exhibited a strong temper throughout, and large fractional gains were common at the end of the day. The feature of the trading was the heavy buying of Omaha, its net gain being 3½ per cent, for the day. The rise in Omaha caused a sympathetic advance in Northwest, which, however, was not so strong at the close, reacting ½ per cent, from its best price, though it closed with a gain of 1½ per cent. Among the specialties Manhattan was in better demand and closed at its highest price with a gain of 3½ per cent. Consolidated with a gain of 3% per cent. Consolidated Gas was also strong and gained 1% per cent. The close was firm to strong generally at about the best prices. Sales—Listed stocks, 425,000 shares; unlisted stocks, 42,000 shares.

TOLD BY A TIGER SLAYER.

Thinks No More of Killing Man Esters than a Yankee Boy of Woodchucks.

For years Frank Leyburn has been known as the tiger slayer of Amoy. There is not a village along the coast of China, no matter how remote from the great centres of population, to which his fame has not extended. With him the killing of the great man eaters who infest the jungles is looked upon as a pastime, and he has shot them under almost all imaginable circumstances. He arrived in this city on the steamer He arrived in this city on the steamer Gaelic, en route for London, and it was early in the afternoon that he strode into the California Hotel. He wrote his name in the California Hotel. He wrote his name in big boid letters across the page of the register, and lost no time in plunging into a bath tub. Later he emerged from his seclusion, looking ruddy and muscular. He looked more like the ordinary globe-trotter than the slayer of tigers whose name is known throughout the Orient. In appearance he is tall and robust, with closely trimmed white beard and keen gray eyes. A long loose-fitting sack coat of gray tweed was buttoned about him, and a brown derly hat was filted back far enough upon his head to show that he is growing slightly bald. His feet were incased in shoes of russet leather, and he carried in his hand a beavy cane, which he clung to tenaciously as he strode rapidly

"Oh, yes," he said in a gruff tone when asked about his experiences as a tiger hunter, "I have bagged a good many of the beasts in my day, but there is nothing remarkabl in my day, but there is nothing remarkable about that. With us, don't you know, it is marely a pastime, and we hunt the tigers for the sport there is in it. Why, bless my soul. I can see no reason why any one should care to hear about tiger hunting. With us it is ordinary sport, just as deer stalking is in America.

is in America.
"After all," he continued, as he grasped his cane more firmly and planted his feet very wide apart, "the tigers of China are very wide apart. "the tigers of China are not nearly as ferocious as those of India. but they give a good deal of trouble to the natives at times. When one of them gets a taste of human blood he at once becomes ferocious, and is never satisfied with any other diet. They become transformed into what are known as man eaters, and they hunt human beings as a cat does mice. "Take a big man eater, for instance, and he is pretty sure to make his lair in a jungle close to a native village, avoiding the larger towns, and always on the alert to and he is pretty since to have a seriously close to a native village, avoiding the larger towns, and always on the alert to make a victim of some luckless human being who may fall in his way. It is his habit to lurk about the outskirts of the settlement, concealed in the edges of the jungle, and await his opportunity to seize a victim. Meonlight nights suit him best. At such a time he is extremely vigilant. He prowls about until he sees some belated struggler in the streets. This is the opportunity for which he has waited for hours, perhaps for days. There is the flash of a heavy body in the moonlight, a cry of terror, a brief struggle, and the man ester is off for his lair in the jungle, bearing the helpless body of a human being in his massive Jaws. Months later, it may be, the bones are found in the dense undergrowth.

"When I went to China twenty years ago I had already some experience in hunting big game, and I wanted to kill a tiger. One day while in the counting-house of our firm

I had already some experience in hunting big game, and I wanted to kill a tiger. One day while in the cohnting-house of our firm at Amoy, two natives came in in an excited frame of mind to tell that a man had been carried off from a neighboring village the night before by a man eater. This was just the opportunity I had been waiting for. Taking out a heavy express ride which I had brought from London with me. I took the twe natives to act as guides and started out. On reaching the village I found everything in an uproar. The natives, who are timid, were paralyzed with fear, and scarcely dared to venture out of their houses unless in the middle of the day.

"I had already learned something about the habits of the man eater and knew just how to go at it. From inquiry among the natives I ascertained the exact location of the lair of the tiger, and for a small compensation I succeeded in securing the services of a coolle to guide me to the place.

"Starting late in the afternoon, we made our way slowly through the jungle, and just about dusk reached the spot. Now, the night is the best time to bag a man eater, for he is then asleep, and may be shot before he is aroused. Knowing this, I had brought with me a bull's-ere lantern. Before night had set in fully I got everything in readiness, and waited until it grew pitch dark. Having in the mean time located the exact position of the lair. I left my guide, who by this time was almost terror stricken, behind me, and on my hands and knees crept through the jungle. By the cautious use of my lantern I found the lair. Turning on the light I was resting on his paws and squarely facing me. As I prepared to level my rife at him, he stirred uneasity. Turning the light full upon him, he raised his head, but before he was thoroughly aroused I sent a ball from my rife crashing through his brain. By good fortune I had struck him squarely between the eyes. There was a feast of rejoicing in the village when I returned with the skin.

"Turn before I left Chies en my present "Just before I loft Chine on my present trip I struck a man eater who proved to be a tough customer. He was an old fellow and had a record of about twenty victims. They sent for me and I went after him. I had with me a double-barrelled rifle of large calibre. I found no difficulty in tracing him to his lair, but he gave me a narrow call before I succeeded in finishing him. The trouble was that when I found him he was awake and ferocious, apparently from the effects of hunger. I had shot so many that I thought nothing of it and gave my tiger one barrel out of my gun. Most unaccountably I missed him clean, and his eyes fairly blazed. Lashing the ground with his tail, he sprang toward me like a flash. As he was in the air I let go with the other barrel and struck him in the left shoulder, the heavy ball penetrating to his heart. He fell at my feet, and so close was he that before he died I could feel his hot breath upon me. It was the most narrow escape that I ever had. When measured the tiger was found to be aimost twelve feet in length, and his claws were one and three-quarter inches in length.

be almost twelve feet in length, and his claws were one and three-quarter inches in length. I had the latter mounted and distributed them among my friends.

"I could tell you a great many stories if I had the time, but they have grown old to me and would be of no interest to the public," and the tiger slaver hastened away to his dinner.—San Francisco Examiner.

FLOGGED THE PREACHER. Editor Bibb, of Louisa, Took Exceptions to

the Words of a Salvation Army Captain.

LOUISA, VA., Feb. 1.—Special.—One Captain Boyd, who claims to be a member of the Salvation Army, came to our town a few weeks ago and commenced a revival in the court-house. During his stay he has caused a good deal of talk among the citizens in regard to his style of preaching, &c. He has hit the dancing church members and the whisky-drink rs and sellers some very hard licks, and has not spared the churches themselves; in fact, he went so far as to call one of in fact, he went so far as to call one of our places of worship a hell hole. Never-theless most of our church members attend his meetings, and seem to be per-fectly carried away with him, while others do not indorse him, and declare that he uses language in the pulpit which no decent person should listen to.

Mr. James E. Bibb, editor of our county paper, is one of the few who do not indorse Captain Boyd. He met the Captain at the hotel one night last week and had culte an argument with him on the at the hotel one night last week and had quite an argument with him on the whisky question. I will here state that Mr. Bibb is perfectly temperate in his habits. The discussion became quite warm, and presently Captain Boyd, fearing, as he says, there might be trouble, left the room. In one of his sermons, after this happened, Captain Boyd said something to which Mr. Bibb took exception, whereupon Mr. Bibb rose to his feet and pronounced Captain Boyd a liar, and in pronounced Captain Boyd a liar, and in the last issue of his paper appeared an editorial criticising Captain Boyd very severely.

In his Sunday afternoon's sermon Captain Boyd made this article the subject of his discourse, and went for Mr. Bibb again, who was not present, but, on hearing of the way Captain Boyd had "jumped on him" before a congregation, Mr. Bibb, after the service, went over to the court-house and gave the Captain a very sound thrashing.

very sound thrashing.

There was quite an excitement for a short time, and more trouble would have arisen had not some friends taken 11r.

Sibb away. Mr. Bibb's action caused considerable indignation among most of the citizens, while it was indersed by a good many. The affair is still being discussed among the citizens, and there may yet be trouble, but I do not think it probable that any thing else will arise from it. Captain Boyd is still preaching at the court-house, and has large congregations

The local option question is being 'reely discussed on our streets to-day. Most of our preachers have taken a hand in it. and are carrying around petitions and try-ing to get the required number of signa-tures of the registered voters of the district, in order to call an election in April
